

Immediate help in case of crisis or disaster

“Lighthouses”: They are seen as contact points during a blackout. A lighthouse is set up when a prolonged, widespread damage event occurs, such as a complete power blackout. In the event of such a crisis or disaster, citizens can seek immediate help in a lighthouse, quickly and unbureaucratically. Competent staff are available on site to provide support.

Every lighthouse is supplied with emergency power and manned around the clock if necessary, so that you can always be helped in an emergency situation.

Lighthouses – contact points
in case of crisis
or disaster

Specifically, you can do the following in any lighthouse:

- Make emergency calls to the police, fire brigade and ambulance service,
- Obtain information from public authorities,
- Get news, messages and tips on how to respond,
- Make and pass on requests for assistance.

Further information and different language versions, as well as a list of all “lighthouses” in the Lippe district can be found online: www.bad-salzuflen.de/krisenfall

Please note:

Lighthouses do not serve as dwellings or emergency shelters. They are not designed for longer-term provision. It must be guaranteed that the rescue vehicles are ready for use. Ensure clear access.

Making provisions in crisis and disaster situations

Visit the website www.bbk.bund.de to find out more about preparing for emergency situations, as well as guides and checklists published by the Federal Office of Civil Protection and Disaster Assistance. Here you will find information on emergency supplies, document folders, emergency luggage and basic measures to prepare for crises and disasters.

KATWARN and NINA: Use warning apps

In addition to sirens and information shared via radio, television and the internet, warnings can also be sent via apps. These apps communicate with official agencies and send messages about dangerous situations to smartphones in case of emergency. You can download both KATWARN and NINA free from your app store.
